Introduction

As part of a general anaesthetic, we commonly administer drugs to relax your muscles. Then, before you wake up, we administer drugs to reverse this effect. You have been given a 'reversal drug' today called Sugammadex. Another name for this drug is Bridion. This drug has a unique interaction with the hormone progesterone. This is why you have been provided with this information leaflet. Sugammadex temporarily increases your likelihood of becoming pregnant after unprotected sexual intercourse in certain situations.

What should you do if you are using an oral hormonal contraceptive tablet/ pill?

Types of oral hormonal contraceptive you may be using:

- Progesterone only contraceptive 'mini pill'
- Combined oral contraceptive 'pill'

The effect of Sugammadex means that even if you took your pill this morning, it is the equivalent to one missed pill. Advice - you must follow the missed pill advice in the package leaflet of the oral contraceptive.

What should you do if you are using any other type of hormonal contraceptive?

Types of other hormonal contraceptive you may be using:

- Contraceptive implant
- Hormonal Intra-Uterine system (IUS) (Mirena coil)
- Depo-provera (injection)
- Vaginal ring
- Skin patch

Advice - you must use a barrier method of contraceptive e.g. condoms for the next seven days.

What should you do if you are using any non-hormonal contraceptive?

Types of non-hormonal contraceptive you may be using:

- Condoms
- Cervical caps
- Diaphragm
- Contraceptive sponge
- Copper IUD
- Spermicide

Advice - no further action is required. Sugammadex only reduces the effectiveness of hormone-based contraceptives.

Frequently asked questions

Will other drugs given to me as part of the anaesthetic affect my hormonal contraceptive? No, this interaction is not known to occur with other anaesthetic related drugs.

Where can I get more information?

For further contraceptive advice please contact your GP or local sexual health and contraceptive services. Mersey and West Lancashire Teaching Hospitals NHS Trust cannot accept responsibility for information provided by other organisations.

There may be students and observers present during your consultation as part of their ongoing training. Please let the staff know if you do not wish any students to be present during your attendance

Please ask a member of staff if you would like a chaperone present during your procedure.
